POEM:

the atmosphere could be felt,
as the L.D.A was winning the match for itself.
kids, grands and adults,
all of them chanting no matter the result
wearing classic shirts with no fashion;
just sincere, loyal and true passion.

the adrenaline, yelling and shouting of the fans,
as stands were filled with red drums and flags;
not even wind, storm, rain or hail,
no matter what was the weather,
nothing would impede those fans from being together.

everyone would sing and scream,

chanting and cheering up the team.
as time passed they sang more,
always louder than before,
seeking and wishing the team to score.
to the long distance,
the flares could be smell,
making the stadium a living hell.

at every match the family would visit the L.D.A,
it didn't matter how busy and occupied it was their day;
as under no condition,
it was possible for them to end this tradition.

the atmosphere could be felt,
as the L.D.A was winning the match for itself.
kids, grands and adults,
all of them chanting no matter the result,
wearing classic shirts with no fashion;
just sincere, loyal and true passion.
